THEY WERE BEAUTIFUL

My mind had wandered, the game had been so boring.
My thoughts collected slowly, and, as my mind cleared,
I became aware of a dull roar in my ears.

Then I realized the band director was glaring at me.
I had missed the "horns up" again.
I looked down the field just as it happened -
A boy went over the line for a touchdown.
The dull roar became a screaming crescendo.
We were ahead!

My mind became suddenly alert;
I began to watch the game closely.
One player after another came in for a rest,
Quietly waiting by the sidelines for water.
Their replacements looked just as tired as they.

As we came down to the last minute of the game,
I realized suddenly that these boys
Had been playing a larger, heavier team for nearly two hours!
They were exhausted,
But from somewhere they were still finding the strength;
The strength to hold off the opposition.
They had given more than their best.
I looked to the field as the buzzer sounded.
There I saw - not eleven boys - eleven men.

They were beautiful.

LINES WRITTEN IN AN EMPTY SCHOOL HALL

The last game of the season.
 The last game of the year.
 The last game of high school.
 That means forever.

I look down the corridor and see scuffed hall floors, half-open doors, and dark classrooms.
 I hear cars going by and children laughing on the playground.
 I see blue-and-white paper streamers and decorated lockers.
 I see a sign that proudly bears the legend "Home of the Victorious Mustangs."
 As I read it, I hear the echoes of band music, cheering crowds, and shrilling referee whistles.
 I remember boys playing their hearts out; losing; and getting up to play again, even harder than before.
 I remember girls with faith and pride in those boys; girls who loved them even more when they fought and lost.
 I remember tears for defeat, prayers for injured, and laughter for victory.
 I remember kids with pride in themselves, in their accomplishments, and in their school.
 I remember my first date, and the times I thought my heart was broken forever.
 I remember sighs of relief after tests, and groans over homework assignments.
 I remember a long line of schools, and a longer line of voices and faces that belong to the memory of those schools.
 I remember good times and bad times and - oh - I remember!

Then I come back from my memories, and I look down the empty hall, with its scuffed floors and torn streamers;
 Realizing that soon I will walk down this hall and out of this building, leaving it forever empty of my presence.

WORLD, I'M COMIN'

World, I'm comin' - get ready!
 'Cause I'm comin' with a whirl and a bang.
 I have an open mind,
 I am full of ideas and a boundless energy.
 So World - watch out!
 The rein that's holding me back is gonna break,
 and you won't be able to stop me.

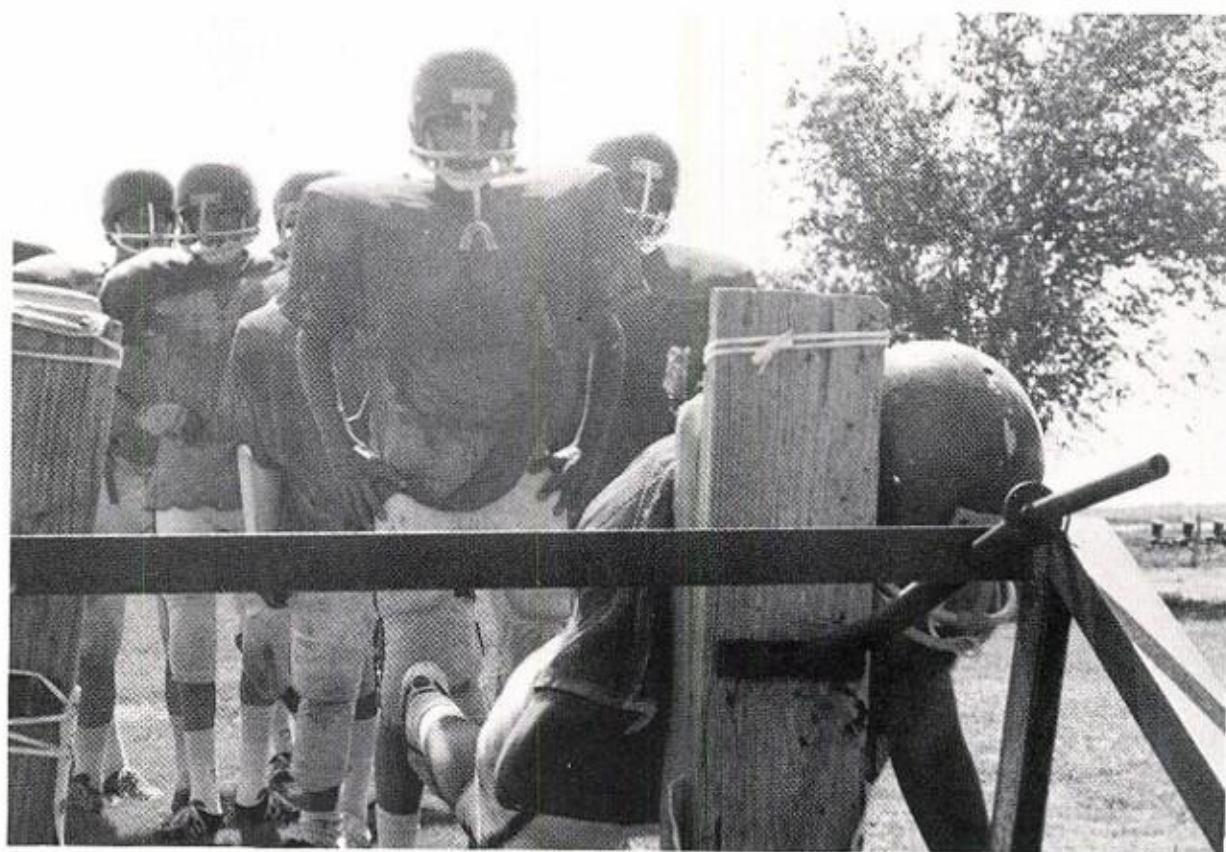

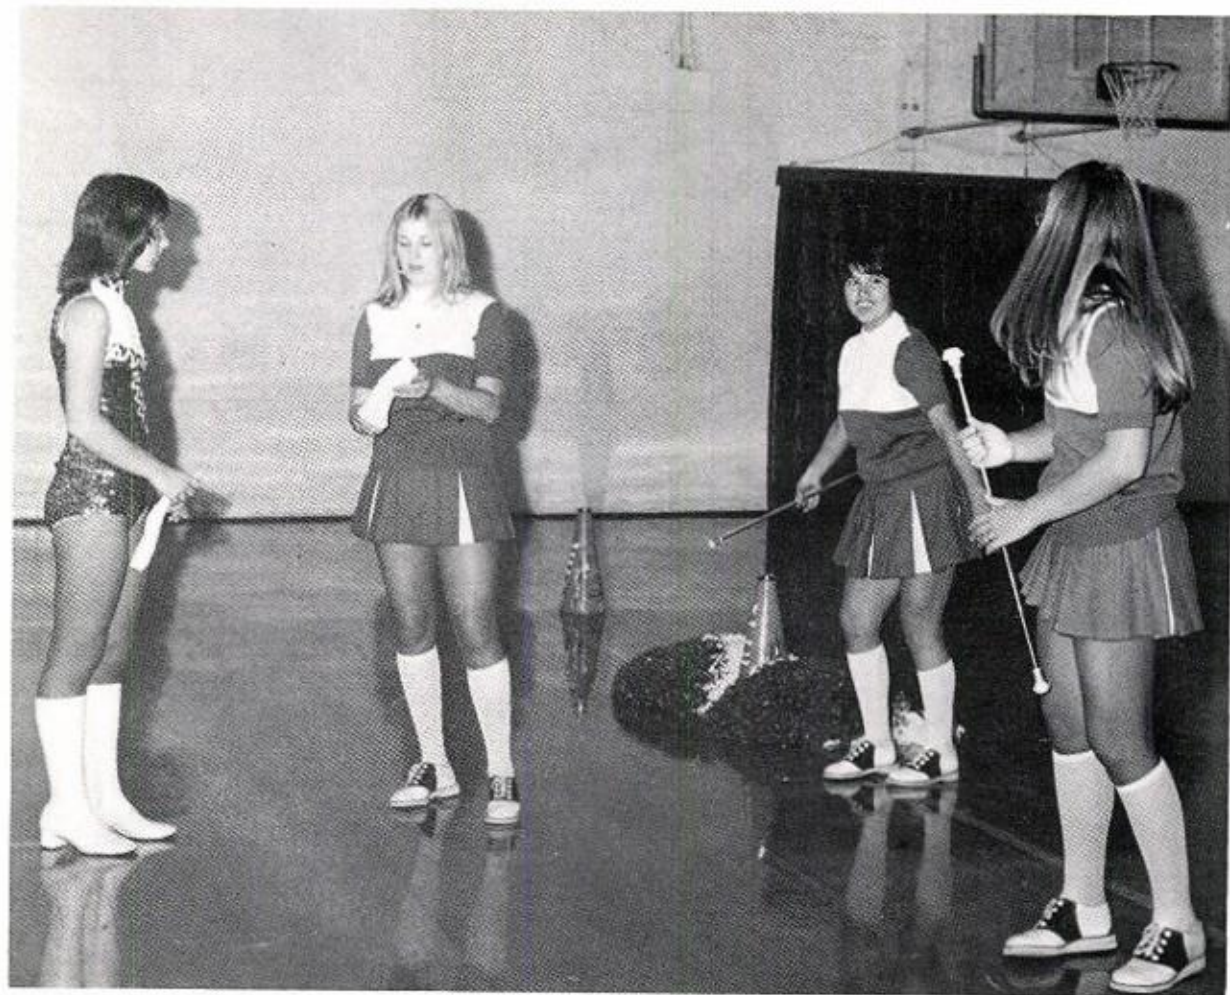

Who am I?
 I'm the leaders of the future;
 I'm the NOW generation;
 I am youth and I am free and -
 World, I'm comin' - get ready!
